PATRICK PARROT'S UNNATURAL HISTORY

TRANSLATED FROM THE ANIMAL LANGUAGE

Why The Horse Has Such A Long Face

PAT stood on a tiny ledge of rock jutting out into the pool and admired what he saw there. He was looking down into the cool water, and he saw a lovely green parrot whose head was decorated with green and yellow feathers.

"My goodness," exclaimed Pat, "what a handsome creature—the very image of myself! It's like looking into a mirror, that's what it is!"

Pat looked again, and jumped in fright. Beside his own bright green reflection another creature had suddenly appeared. To Pat it seemed like something out of this world—a big round blob of black, brown, and white. Two big black rubbery lips spread apart showing two rows of enormous white teeth. Two pointed ears stood out, and one of them wagged. Then Pat was cast into a shadow as a great long shape brushed past him, and—splash—the mirror was broken into a thousand ripples. Harry Horse was taking a drink.

"Well, I declare!" yelled Pat, "You certainly scared the life out of me!"

An enormous eye on the side of Harry's face looked at Pat. The eye was almost as big as Pat's whole head.

Harry said nothing, and just went ahead drawing in the cool water, every once in a while giving a slurp of satisfaction. Then he raised his head, and Pat got a shower as the water dripped from the big wide lips.

"Hey!" spluttered Pat, "this isn't Saturday—it's Tuesday. And when I take a bird bath, I don't want any company!"

Elmer Elephant, Philo Fox, Horace Hippo and several others heard the indignant Pat, and hurried to see what it was all about. They laughed when they saw Pat ruffling up his feathers as he shook off the water.

Harry just looked sadly at Pat, and bending down said, "Sorry."

It was a comical sight to the onlookers when they compared Pat's tiny figure with Harry's great long face. Little Pat glaring up at the one big brown eye nearest him, and down at the black nostril and mouth. Up and down, up and down, went his head.

"Ha, Ha!" laughed Philo Fox, "Look at Pat trying to give Harry's long face the once-over! Hey, Pat, why don't you stand about twenty feet away and get a bird's-eye view?"

"Well," Horace Hippo spoke up with a two-foot grin, "it is a lot of ground to cover for such a little fellow."

"Longest face in the jungle," Elmer Elephant said. "My nose may be a trifle longer than most, but the rest of my face is as broad as it is long."

"Wonder how Harry got such a long face?" whispered Philo. "Maybe Pat could tell us?"

"I heard you the first time," Pat said and winked at Harry. "I'll be glad to tell you the story even if I might forget some of the details."

"It all started with Harry's ancestor, Hosmer Horse, who lived millions of years ago. He roamed in the same jungle as Horace Hippo's ancestor, Homer, and was a good friend of his. You remember, I told you the story of how Homer Hippo got his big mouth—by laughing so much—which he passed on to his descendants. Well, Harry's story is almost exactly the same, except that it's entirely different.

"At that time, horses were quite different from what they are today. They had a well-shaped head on a short but graceful neck, and small, unnoticeable ears. Everything jibed with their sleek brown bodies. Beg pardon, Harry.

"But Hosmer Horse had one quality which finally undid him. He loved to be in the company of his best friend, Homer Hippo. They were together at all hours of the day and night.

"Well, Homer Hippo was always laughing at any kind of joke, good or bad. He was so famous for this weakness that people came from far and wide to tell him jokes. And, as you know, he laughed so much that his mouth grew bigger and bigger.

"Now Hosmer Horse had a good sense of humor. In fact, it was so perfect that he never saw anything funny in the stale jokes Hippo laughed at. They bored him.

"But he was faithful to his friend and remained at his side, day after day, and listened to the same old gags over and over again. Of course, Hosmer Horse was polite. He always joined in the laughter that followed a joke, and in fact, to please his friend Hippo, he laughed louder than anyone else. In truth, this loud, hollow, mirthless laugh of Hosmer's soon became known as the 'Horse-Laugh' by which name it is called to this day.

"Hosmer tried hard to enjoy the stale jokes, but just couldn't. That made him sad. And he was too loyal to desert his friend every time somebody came along with their jokes. But he learned the knack of turning his ears around, so that they faced the opposite direction, and partly shut out the talk. This is a trick that the horse family still owns.

"Well, as Hippo's mouth became bigger and wider, Hosmer's spirits dropped lower and lower, and his face grew longer and longer. Each joke made him sadder than he was before.

"Finally, one day, he could stand it no more, and told Hippo he was going away. Just then, somebody came along and asked:

"Why does a chicken cross the road?"

"And then Hosmer Horse spoke up.

"To get on the other side. And that's where I'm going—to the other side of the continent."

"And so saying, he galloped off, and broke the world's record for speed and distance that has held to this day," concluded Pat.

"Ha Ha Ha," laughed Harry Horse. "that's a good one! 'Why does a chicken cross the road?' You do make up the most original jokes, Pat. Know any more funny ones like that?"

And Harry the Horse doubled up in laughter which shook him from stem to stern.

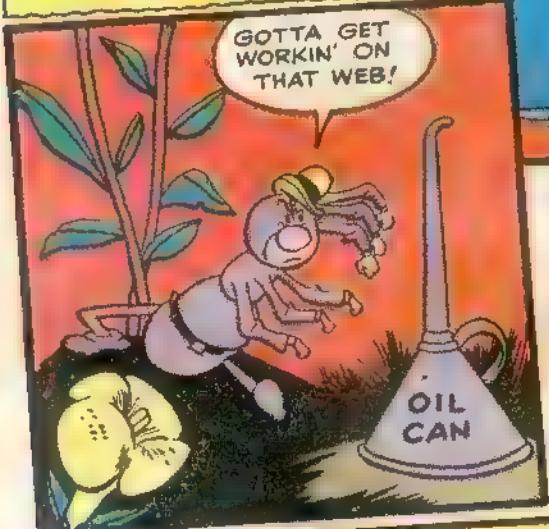

Funny Facts

A PIG IS A NATURALLY CLEAN ANIMAL. IF GIVEN A CHANCE, HE WILL ALWAYS CHOOSE CLEAN MUD TO WALLOW IN... AND WALLOWING IN MUD IS COMMON TO ALL THICK-SKINNED ANIMALS, BECAUSE ONLY MUD OR SOME SIMILAR SUBSTANCE REMAINS COOL LONG ENOUGH FOR THE COOLNESS TO PENETRATE THEIR THICK SKINS.

THE REASON A SPIDER'S LEGS DON'T STICK TO HIS OWN WEB IS THAT HE KEEPS HIS LEGS CAREFULLY COVERED WITH A THIN FILM OF OILY SUBSTANCE.

MOST PEOPLE THINK KISSING IN ESKIMOLAND IS DONE BY "RUBBING NOSES"! THIS ISN'T SO... RUBBING NOSES IS MERELY A SALUTE!

TREES DON'T DIE OF OLD AGE. THEY ARE GENERALLY KILLED BY DISEASES, STORMS, INSECTS OR STRANGULATION BY THEIR OWN ROOTS.

THE OWL, BECAUSE OF ITS SOLEMN APPEARANCE, HAS ACQUIRED A REPUTATION FOR WISDOM... ACTUALLY, HOWEVER, THE BIRD IS RATHER STUPID!

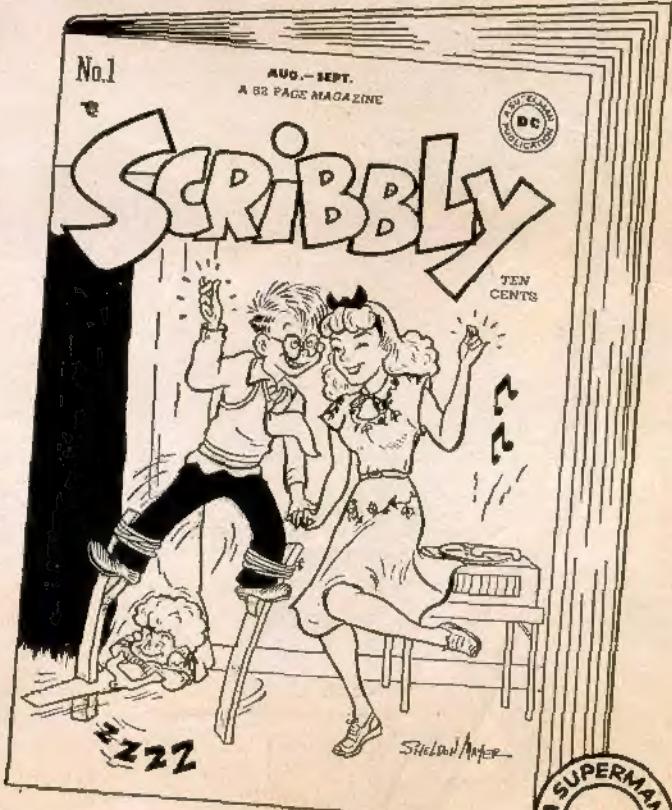

IT IS WIDELY BELIEVED THAT RABBITS SHOULD BE LIFTED BY THE EARS. THIS ACTUALLY HURTS THE RABBIT. HE SHOULD BE LIFTED BY THE SCRUFF OF THE NECK...
